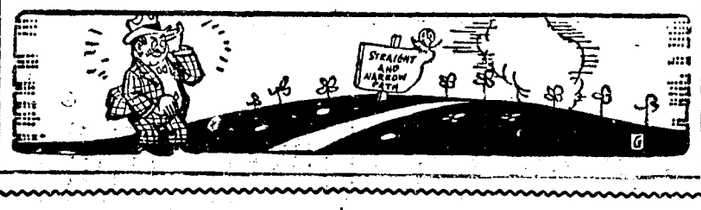
Poem by Uncle John

I've learnt to be contented with the way the good Lord made me; I can't believe that anything he ever done was wrong; I wouldn't own an appetite that ever disobeyed me, and—while I wobble sometimes, I have allers got along. . . .

I never harbor notions, when they act the least suspicious, of tryin' to oozle in between my better self an' me. . . . But, take a disposition that is vain, or avaricious,—most any brand of foolery can put 'em up a tree!

I can't indulge an impulse, when my conscience don't approve it; there's allers hidden danger, clost around the safety-zone; To overcome my meanness, I determine not to love it, for the devil is a feller that it pays to let alone. . . .

There's foibles in the femenine that cirkliate around me; An' freaks in masculinity, which pester me a heap,—but if I retain my innocence, as when my mother found me, I couldn't dread Perdition if its hole was twicet as deep!



END IS APPROACHING

FEW papers in this country these days defend existing prohibition conditions. Scarcely any of them would have saloons brought back, but the big majority protest against what is now taking place. The other day this page read the editorial printed herewith in an exchange—and the paper is one which does not have wet inclinations, but pretty well reflects what newspapermen think nowadays. The editorial reads:

The eighteenth amendement is the first appendix to the constitution of the United States to fail of its purpose. Evidence of its failure is reflected daily by court records and newspapers the country over.

When California, and other states, ratified the amendment they were sincere in their action. They thought the eighteenth amendment would be enforced with the rigid stringency which has characterized the government of the United States in maintaining respect for other rules laid down for governing a peace-loving people.

They have been disappointed. The law which was expected to make America dry has been trifled with, trampled upon, and even jested about by the very officials employed to enforce it.

Our futile efforts to enforce national prohibition have made us the laughing stock of a rum-soaked world.

Conditions became so deplorable that many states sought relief through the adoption of enforcement laws. California has one—the Wright Act. What has it accomplished? Little aside from drawing state, county and local authorities into a riot of lawlessness which the Federal government apparently admits its incompetency to handle. Result: Federal enforcement officers draw fat pay for sitting at headquarters sipping beverages of questionable alcoholic content—mayhap the boodle of a recent raid—jesting on prohibition that doesn't prohibit, while state police bear the brunt of trying to enforce a discredited amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Thus we have a condition little different, except that it suffers by comparison, from California's oldtime local option law. If one community has officers more proficient in law enforcement than a neighboring community, naturally one will be less moist than the other.

Under local option communities that were "dry" were made so by a majority vote of the people, and each took upon himself a personal interest in seeing that it was kept dry. This "personal interest" seemed to change to an attitude of "Let Uncle Sam do it" when national prohibition came.

One thing, "bootlegging" did not hold such alluring prospects as it does today. Liquor had to be purchased from bonded warehouses and was necessarily of staple brand also, it had to be sold at a reasonable price, for there always was a licensed "wet spot" in a near-by township where it was to be had.

Today it is a case of mashing up a few prunes and other fruits unfit for market, adding a dash of barley, letting it sit until fermentation sets in, and selling the seepage at four bits a whif. Result: Bootlegger and undertaker share the profits.

Most any undertaking, lawful or otherwise, offering such opportunities for 100 per cent profit and no expense has its attractions for some.

There is but one way to solve the problem of prohibition—and that is not through a state enforcement act. Either the government must take a firm stand and dry the United States—which it can do—or it must repeal the laws which have so feebly struck at, and at the same time so generally and so beneficially advertised, the liquor traffic.

THE FARMER WAITS

A meropolitan daily the other day very truthfully went on record editorially last week thusly: There isn't any doubt about it—the farmer is going to have considerable to say in this next presidential election. He seems a little grim; it will not be easy to flatter; he has his agricutural bloc in Congress; he has his senators, like Frazier and Brookhart and Ladd, intimately related to agricultural life, and there are quite a number of things that are of interest to him.

Phrases will not fool him easily. No orator will be able to swing around the circle and satisfy the farmer by reminding him that he has an automobile now where he used to own a family phaeton, that his wife has an electric iron and a telephone, and that his children go away to college. "What of it?" asks the farmer, "I want other things as well. The average farm income last year in this country wasn't more than $900—and that didn't allow for depreciation and interest on my investment. What have these political parties got to say about taxes, railroad freight rates, farm credits, loans, marketing arrangements, waterpower and things like that? Come around next week and tell us something more."

How long ago it seems—and it was only a quarter of a century—since Bryan turned a Democratic convention upside down with his Cross of Gold speech. "Burn down your cities and leave our farms—and your cities would spring up again as if by magic. But destroy our farms and the grass will grow in the streets of every city in this country."

Those who have ever attempted to get the telephone number of a friend bearing the name of Smith or Jones may perhaps find some consolation in the fact that the last issue of the Stockholm telephone directory contains 66 columns of Johanssons and 48 columns of Pettersons.

Pear Situation Is Not Bright

Central Farm Center held its regular meeting Friday evening and many members were absent. The time was taken up principally in discussng participation in the Pow-Wow and the pear situation.

Situation Not Favorable

Many members are pear growers and no little interest was shown in farm Advisor Myszka's talk on conditions the growers are now facing, which apparently are not so favorable as last year. The canners decline to abide by prices fixed by the pear growers association, claiming they can get all the pears they want for much less. No one is wise enough to advise the growers just what to do, but it is suggested they accept prices offered for half their crop and, if taking chances, take them on the other half only. The ripening is said to be earlier than in normal years, and a line of action will have to be decided on very soon.

The growers are faced by another strongly entrenched enemy, ready for a fight. The blister mite has this year, according to report developed into possibly the worst pest the pear grower has to combat in this county. It turns green leaves brown and $40 pears into $15 fruit as fast as a bootlegger can reduce drinking citizens. It is said a lot of damage has already resulted from its ravages this year. It causes small indentations in the fruit blemishing the best to away below No. 1. However, the farm advisor says control is sure if done right and at the right time. As this pest may greatly increase in activity next year unless controlled, and as the first spraying must be done in the fall, every pear grower should get in touch with the horticultural commissioner or farm advisor promptly on blister mite control.

Grapes Are Threatened

There was also considerable discussion of Mexican measles on grapevines and its control by spraying, in which deep interest was shown by the vineyardists.

Getting In Shape

More definite arrangements were adopted as to the community exhibit at the Pow-Wow. Every one seemed willing to furnish something for the exhibit but, farmer like, feared they may not have time to get it in order for the gatherer. This misconception it is thought will be easily remedied, and no doubt the Central will send in a good exhibit. Hanby Ford was appointed to gather all things offered for the exhibit, so the farmers and their wives will only have to prepare their articles and inform Mr. Ford, who will call for them and after the fair is over return them.

Mr. Tadlock's Position

In a previous discussion of thistles and other vicious weeds, which for five years have been an increasing menace to agriculture in this county, it was not intended to give the impression that horticultural commissioner Orval Tadlock had adversely criticized the highway commission or the supervisors, which he did not. Mr. Tadlock says both bodies are willing to cooperate with him in every possible way to eradicate this menacing pest.

F. Cardenas, house guest of A. Perelli-Minetti, returned from Monterey Tuesday. Messrs. Perelli-Minetti and Cardenas drove from Monterey to San Francisco, Mr. Minetti remaining there for a few hours and later going back to Monterey. Mr. Cardenas coming on to Ukiah by train.

HOPLAND LOST

Lack of interest marked the baseball game Sunday on the local diamond between the Ukiah and Hopland teams. The final score was 13 to 0 in favor of the Ukiah boys.

Redwood Valley After Pow-Wow Prize

(Press Special Service)

Redwood Valley, July 16—Considerable excitement prevails hereabouts over the activity of various agents who claim to represent oil companies which are seeking to get land leases with a view of, it is presumed, boring for oil hereabouts.

The Redwood Valley Fair Association held a meeting in the hall Sunday last to go over the situation and ascertain the best plans to follow. In addition the financing of the exhibit was discussed. To take care of the expense of the exhibit and the float, which will be entered by Redwood Valley, a jitney dance will be held at Grange Hall Saturday evening July 28.

Herman Traub has started a meat business and will hereafter furnish local people with meat twice a week. This supplying of fresh meat is a considerable convenience for the Redwood Valley people.

The camping spots about the valley are dotted with camp equipment of motorists from the cities these days. An unusual number of autoists are traveling now.

Mr. and Mrs. Nels Nelson and Mrs. Gunderson are touring the southeastern section of the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Merlin Tull are the happy parents of a little girl baby.

NEW DRUGGIST PLEASED AT GAIT BUSINESS STARTS OFF

C. H. Crawford, the Eureka man who opened Crawford's Drug store in the Marks building last week and whose formal opening was on Saturday last, declared himself well pleased with trade up to the present time. Saturday was opening day and on that date Mr. Crawford gave away large numbers of balloons to the boys and girls and presented each lady who called with a carnation. The store is well arranged and new stock is being received right along.
